Lessons Learned

- Widely varying and divergent needs – synthesis is challenging and variety is crucial
- However, convenience (in campus location, working space, proximity to food and drink, access to tools and community) is key for busy grads
- Determine study population and where you can find them in advance
- Budget – keycard access and wall construction are expensive; be flexible to meet varied needs and expect surprises
- Awkward spaces – old buildings often have space constraints; you have to work with the space you have
- Plan for multiple versions of design

Acknowledgements & Contact Info

Thanks to Chris Moolin from Sedgwick Business Interiors for the architectural plans and invaluable assistance during this process, as well as Prof. Lorraine Maxwell and her students for their class projects and figures. For more information, please contact Camille Andrews at ca92@cornell.edu.